A new flu virus is reportedly emerging in Canada in the wake of the swine flu outbreaking in Mexico. In the province of Saskatchewan, western Canada, two employees at a hog barn were seemingly infected with a new flu virus. Despite the health official stressed that the strain was irrelevant with the H1N1 pandemic, the new virus from these two farmers was common in the swine population called triple reassortant H3N2. Insofar, the Saskatchewan hog barn has not been under quarantine, but the owner has agreed not to move the pigs. Besides, all workers on the hog farm have to be vaccinated. If the new virus is evidently deadly, all the hogs here will eventually go to slaughter. Frank Plummer, chief science adviser for the Public Health Agency of Canada, said that H3N2 was likely transmitted from the pigs to the workers. By contrast, human was the major source of the H1N1 virus transmission. Canadian Swine Health Board executive director Bob Harding said the impacts of H3N2 might not be as devastating as H1N1. Nevertheless, we had to keep alert on H3N2 from hogs.

32. What is the main idea of this reading passage?

- (A) More H1N1 infection. (B) The quarantine of hogs. (C) A new vaccine of the H3N2. (D) A new flu virus in Canada.

35. Which of the following is true?

- (A) H3N2 is not as deadly as H1N1. (B) The major source of the transmission of H3N2 is human. (C) All farmers have suffered from the H3N2. (D) Moving the pigs is the best bet for reducing the H3N2.

“Dogs can get jealous”, said lead author Friederike Range of the University of Vienna, Australia. In experiment with 43 dogs, one dog watched another dog receive a reward for doing a trick. Then, the watching dog performed the same trick but was not rewarded. Next time, that dog refused to do the same trick again, Range said. This research result remained true for different experiment participants such as chimpanzees and capuchin monkeys. “If one dog does not get the same reward as its partner, it will scratch, yawn, and avoid the gaze of the partner dog as well as the experimenter.” Range’s scientific study was further verified by Scott Creel, a behavior ecologist at Montana State University.

36. Which scientific finding has been discovered in this passage?

- (A) The sensitivity of sounds. (B) The quality of reward. (C) The stimulus-response act. (D) The emotional feedback.
